MRIs: AACR2 Rule Interpretations

by Michael Gorman and J. McRee Elrod

Introduction

The authors believe that it is both possible and important to preserve the advantages of AACR2's easy to comprehend and logical arrangement, indexing by known terms, familiar word usage, adherence to the prescriptions of the International Standard Bibliographic Descriptions (ISBDs), and principles such as that which states the added entries should be justified in descriptions.

To that end, Michael Gorman, with the assistance of J. McRee Elrod, has prepared these MRIs in order to permit the continuing use of AACR2 while providing bibliographic records with descriptions and access points that are compatible with those produced by the use of Resource Description and Access (RDA). They are not official nor intended as a replacement for features of the RDA Toolkit, other than those related to description and assignment of access points.
